Bio:

Frank Pallone, Jr. was sworn in for his 19th full term in the U.S. House of Representatives on January 3, 2025. Pallone represents New Jersey's Sixth Congressional District, which includes most of Middlesex County as well as the Bayshore and oceanfront areas of Monmouth County.

Throughout his career, Pallone has fought to make health care more affordable and accessible, protect and strengthen Medicare and Medicaid. Pallone has fought to protect New Jersey's environment, including measures to reduce greenhouse gases in order to avoid the negative impact of climate change. The Congressman has worked hard to clean up Superfund and Brownfield toxic waste sites in Middlesex County.

Pallone is the Ranking Member of the House Energy and Commerce Committee, which has one of the broadest jurisdictions of any congressional committee. The Committee's jurisdiction includes issues pertaining to health care, energy, environment, commerce, food and drug safety, consumer protection, telecommunications, and the internet. Pallone has held a seat on the Committee since 1993.

During the 116th Congress, as the nation confronted the COVID-19 pandemic and the resulting economic crisis, Pallone played a pivotal role in ensuring Congress provided the tools and resources needed to fight this terrible pandemic. He helped shepherd four bills through the House to combat the coronavirus that became law. Thanks to these bills, New Jersey received billions of dollars to help keep New Jerseyans healthy during the pandemic and ensure hardworking families receive the support they need.

Pallone led a bipartisan effort to end surprise medical bills, ensuring patients are protected from unexpected charges from out-of-network health care providers. He also authored the new bipartisan law that will help stop the onslaught of annoying robocalls. He successfully pushed through historic legislation that was signed into law that will help combat climate change by phasing down the production and consumption of hydrofluorocarbons and mandating the repair of methane leaks. He also advanced the fight against climate change with a plan to achieve a 100% clean economy by 2050.

During the 115th Congress, when Democrats were in the minority, Pallone was one of the key leaders in the successful fight to prevent Republicans from repealing the Affordable Care Act (ACA). Pallone also led Democratic efforts to pass bipartisan legislation that expanded treatment for people fighting opioid use disorder and to reauthorize the Safe Drinking Water Act for the first time in 20 years.

Pallone served as the top Democrat on the Energy and Commerce Subcommittee on Health from 2007 to 2014. As Chairman of the Health Subcommittee during the 111th Congress, Pallone played a key role in authoring and passing the ACA. The landmark law extends health care coverage to millions of Americans, while driving down health care costs, and reigning in abusive tactics used by insurance companies to deny medical treatment.

Frank Pallone, Jr. was born in Long Branch, New Jersey where he grew up and still resides. The son of a policeman, Pallone attended local public schools and earned an academic scholarship to Middlebury College. After graduating from Middlebury in 1973, Pallone received his master's degree in international relations at the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy at Tufts University. He earned his law degree from Rutgers University in 1978.

Pallone began his political career in Long Branch. He was elected to the Long Branch City Council in 1982. In 1983, he was elected to the state Senate, representing the Monmouth County coastline. He was re-elected in 1987.

Pallone's Central Jersey district is one of the most ethnically diverse Congressional Districts in the country. It is also home to a wide range of businesses and industry. Light and heavy manufacturing facilities provide jobs for thousands of area residents. Central Jersey is on the cutting edge of high technology research and development. The district is home to Rutgers, the State University of New Jersey. Tourism along the coastal areas is vital to the regional economy.

Pallone married his wife Sarah in 1992. They have three children: Rose, Frank, and Celeste
